Many homes may be underinsured. Is your policy keeping up with your property?

BOISE, ID, June 21, 2022 – If tragedy struck your home – as wildfires have done to homeowners in the Northwest, Colorado and California in recent years – would your homeowners policy pay to completely replace your home and its contents, or would you reach your policy limits before construction could be finished?

A recent report from QuoteWizard says the rapid rise of home prices and cost of building materials have created an environment that may be leaving many homeowners now underinsured. According to the report, it costs approximately $36,000 more to rebuild a home now than it did a few years ago, and home prices have also increased 32 percent since 2020.

The good news is, there is a remedy for this potential problem – if consumers act before a tragedy strikes. NW Insurance Council urges homeowners to review their policies with their insurance company or agent to make sure their current homeowners policy is keeping up with rising costs, and to inquire about extended or guaranteed replacement cost coverage for their homes and possessions.

Many homeowners insurance policies include automatic “inflation guard clauses” that increase the policy’s limits equal to inflation – but not all policies include these clauses. And even if your policy includes that guard, inflationary increases may not reflect the rapid increase in the value of homes or the true cost of construction materials many communities have recently witnessed in the Northwest. For that peace of mind, homeowners may want to consider “extended” or “guaranteed” replacement cost policies.

An extended replacement cost policy pays a pre-determined, stated percentage above the policy limit. A guaranteed replacement cost policy pays to rebuild a home as it was before the disaster without regard to the policy limit.

“Many people are looking for the most affordable option for insurance when they buy a home, and a fixed-limit homeowners policy with or without an inflation guard clause may come with a reduced premium,” said NW Insurance Council president, Kenton Brine. “But the limits of that policy may not be enough if the cost of rebuilding and refurnishing your home have risen in the way many Northwest communities have seen lately.”

It's important to note that not every insurer writing homeowners coverage offers replacement cost coverage, and not every home may be eligible for those coverage options – older homes with unique or costly architectural features are an example. But typically, there are options offered by insurers to increase the coverage limits on most dwellings to help cover rebuilding costs if a home becomes a total loss. It all starts with estimating your home’s value and the cost to rebuild if it were destroyed.

The Insurance Information Institute offers a free brochure with tips and information on determining your home’s replacement cost and whether you should consider additional coverage through an endorsement or switching to extended or guaranteed replacement cost coverage. Tips include:

- Learn more about “actual cash value” vs. “replacement cost” policies by talking with your insurance company or agent. Know which type of policy you have – and which best fits your budget and your needs.
- Learn about other coverage options for your home and its contents, including endorsements that change conditions or limits of your policy or “floaters” – policies that apply to possessions that are movable and unique or expensive, like jewelry, art or collectibles.
- Make sure you know the limits – for dwelling as well as contents – under your current homeowners policy.
- Find out your home’s value and replacement cost – It’s good to know your home’s market value, but also, you should estimate the cost to actually rebuild your home as it is today and to replace all of its contents. Your insurer, agent or real estate professional may be able to help you find a home appraiser for this task.
- Keep a complete and up-to-date inventory of your possessions in case they are damaged, lost or stolen, and have those items appraised as well to determine whether the “contents” limits on your homeowners policies are keeping up with the value of your possessions. Remember, the total loss of your home is a traumatic event, and it will be difficult to recall all of your possessions after the loss – but your insurer will ask for a list, and as much proof as you can provide in order to help you rebuild and recover.
- Find out about any significant building code changes in your community – they could affect the cost of rebuilding, and those costs may not automatically be included in your policy limits. City and county governments have building code information accessible to the public.

- Remember that standard homeowners insurance policies specifically exclude some perils, including floods, earthquakes, mudflow/landslide and sinkholes. If you live in an area where there is a threat of these perils, coverage is likely available through the National Flood Insurance Program, from companies that write earthquake insurance, or from specialty “Surplus Lines” insurance brokers that write “Difference in Conditions” policies. Not sure of these threats and your coverage? Call your company or agent to find out more about your risk.

Depending on the state, homeowners insurance premiums have changed significantly since 2021 as well. According to the QuoteWizard report, Idaho had the largest average increase in homeowners insurance premiums in the nation, at 34 percent in 2022. Oregon had an increase of 8 percent, and Washington state held steady with no general increase reported. (Many homeowners in Washington, however, saw significant premium changes in 2021/22 due to a ban on insurers’ use of credit information in rating, imposed by Commissioner Mike Kreidler in 2021).

The I.I.I. reports that from 2017 to 2021, premium rates are up 12.2 percent on average nationwide. The primary drivers of rate increases are rising catastrophic losses related to extreme weather, population shifts into disaster-prone regions (such as wildfires in wildland-urban interface areas) and increasing home repair and rebuilding costs.

“After a tragic fire, policyholders expect their homes to be rebuilt or repaired to pre-loss conditions,” Brine said. “That’s why it’s important to work with your insurance company or agent now, to make sure your policies are keeping up with your home, your possessions and your life.”
